Retired Anglican Bishop. Speaker and writer on social and corporate ethics

Gender equality is a matter of ethics. Women are half of the population so we won't get anywhere if we don't put women into leadership positions. We have a male dominant ethos, and many men hang back from speaking up about gender equality. We need to have men standing up.

And I have a message for the television industry –we have two appalling pseudo current affairs programmes where egotistical males are the presenters and the women are simply there as their sidekicks. We need women as presenters on television as equals, not side-kicks.
