Women and Girls leading development: the challenges and the progress

Women have shown they can lead their communities in achieving sustainable development but too often this is made impossible by a range of challenges to their health, well being and empowerment. These are often exacerbated by traditional attitudes and gender norms, conflict, policy priorities, inadequate health and education systems and climate change. What are some of the challenges, and how can they be overcome? Dr Gill Greer will draw on what she has seen in her former role as Director of IPPF, and some of her recent reports on the situation the Asia- Pacific.
